Defendants-Appellants.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida
D.C. Docket No. 1:19-cv-25046-RNS

Before JORDAN, JILL PRYOR, and TJOFLAT, Circuit Judges.

TJOFLAT, Circuit Judge:

On December 9, 2019, the Federal Trade Commission (“FTC”) brought suit under 15 U.S.C. § 53(b) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (“FTCA”) against Burton Katz, Robert Zangrillo, Brent Levison, Arlene Mahon, Elisha Rothman, Christopher Sherman, and fifty-four corporate entities¹ under their control, alleging that they had engaged in “unfair or deceptive” business practices in violation of 15 U.S.C. § 45(a) under the collective name of “On Point.” That same day, the FTC filed a motion for a temporary restraining order against the On Point parties to freeze their assets, place the On Point entities into a receivership, and enjoin all On Point parties from materially misrepresenting their services or from releasing consumer information obtained through On Point. Operating under then binding Eleventh Circuit precedent² interpreting § 53(b), the District Court granted the motion for a temporary restraining order in full on December 13. On January 14, 2020, following a two-day evidentiary hearing, the Court granted a preliminary injunction against On Point, extending the asset freeze, receivership, and injunction for the duration of the lawsuit. Point now challenges this preliminary injunction on appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(a).

We affirm the parts of the preliminary injunction enjoining the appellants from misrepresenting their services and releasing consumer information³ for the reasons set forth below. However, while this appeal was pending, the Supreme Court held in AMG Capital Management that 15 U.S.C. § 53(b) does not permit an award of “equitable monetary relief such as restitution or disgorgement,” leaving the asset freeze and receivership aspects of the preliminary injunction unsupported by law. AMG Cap. Mgmt., LLC v. FTC, 141 S. Ct. 1341, 1344 (2021). As a result of this ruling, all On Point appellants except for Dragon Global LLC (“DG”), Dragon Global Holdings LLC (“DGH”), Dragon Global Management LLC (“DGM”), On Point Capital Partners LLC (“OPCP”) (collectively “Dragon Global”), and Zangrillo voluntarily dismissed their appeal and instead sought relief from the District Court. Accordingly, we vacate the parts of the preliminary injunction subjecting the remaining appellants to the asset freeze and receivership⁴ to the extent the District Court has not already provided relief.

We have broken the factual background of this case into three subparts: Subpart A discusses On Point's allegedly deceptive activities, Subpart B discusses Zangrillo and Dragon Global's relationship with On Point, and Subpart C discusses the procedural history of the case.

A.

Through its various corporate entities, On Point owns and operates over two hundred websites aimed at providing the public with information about government benefits and services. On Point has four primary lines of business: 1) a "freemium" service that provides free guides about public benefit and services programs in exchange for customer information, 2) a domain ownership business that buys and sells valuable domain names, 3) a "pay for clicks" business that generates revenue by enticing visitors to click on advertisements, and 4) an e-commerce business that sells guides and services for obtaining government benefits and services like driver's license renewal, passport assistance, and Section 8 housing.

The typical On Point website in the e-commerce line focused on providing information about a benefit or license in a particular state. For example, On Point operated a website known as "floridadriverslicenses.org," which featured an image of the state's border and claimed to be "Your source for [state] driver's information." On Point also operated "DMV.com," which claimed in Facebook advertisements that "[y]ou can renew you [sic] driver licenses online here!! Skip the lines doing it from you [sic] home."

Both DMV.com and state-specific websites like floridadriverslicenses.org would redirect consumers to a landing site, also owned by On Point, where On Point would attempt to induce visitors to buy paid guides or give up personal information with bold headlines like “Renew Drivers License In Your State.”

Consumers who continued further on the landing page would then be prompted to enter credit card information and to “SELECT A SERVICE,” with options including “Renew Driver’s License,” “Replace Driver’s License,” and “Reinstate Suspended License;” depending on the option chosen, On Point would then ask for further information such as birth date. However, once the consumer completed the transaction, they received a guide to obtaining the service based entirely on publicly available information; the selected service was not actually provided through the site or the transaction. Consumers would initially be charged a small amount (usually $3.99 or $4.99), but several days later would be charged a larger amount for the same purchase (usually $19.99 or $21.99). On Point followed this general website and payment model for other state benefits and services such as hunting and fishing licenses.

On Point also operated forty-five websites in its “freemium” line aimed at inducing consumers to provide personal information to determine their eligibility for programs such as housing assistance, Medicaid, and unemployment benefits. For example, “section-8-housing.org” invited consumers to “Find Out If You Are Eligible for the Section 8 Program” and solicited consumer names, email addresses, zip codes, phone numbers, birth dates, gender, employment status, health insurance coverage status, medical diagnoses, disability status, and debt level. Only once consumers provided all this information would they be informed that the site did not actually determine eligibility. Instead, consumers simply received a PDF document containing general advice for estimating eligibility, regardless of the information provided. This consumer information would then be sold to third parties; soon thereafter, consumers would receive spam emails and text messages offering services such as psychic counseling or claiming that the consumer had won prizes in sweepstakes or was eligible for government grants. Between January 2018 and November 2019, On Point raised over eighty million dollars through its e-commerce line and seventeen million through selling consumer information.

On Point did provide some disclaimers. For example, On Point sites disclosed at the top of each page in small, gray letters that they were not affiliated with any government agencies or office and would describe their site in paragraphs under their bold headlines as providing “guide[s] and resources.” On Point also provided a “notice” in a pop-up window that consumers had to click “I understand and accept” on to proceed with their purchase. One such notice informed consumers that:

Driving a motor vehicle without a valid driver’s license, car registration or car title may be illegal, as is driving with expired credentials. Motor vehicle services and applications must be processed by an official DMV location/website. The assistance and services on this site simplify the process by providing personalized guides, documents, and live support for a fee. This site store [sic] cookies, by clicking ‘I UNDERSTAND AND ACCEPT’ you acknowledge the statements above and that this site is privately owned and is not affiliated with nor endorsed by an official agency. To aid in this task, our detailed website has compiled and lists the most important information surrounding your motor vehicle services, so you can ensure the process is handled in a compliant and timely manner.

However, On Point never provided a disclosure or notice that explicitly informed customers that the desired government benefit or service could not be obtained on its websites. Nor were consumers entering personal information told that information would be sold to third parties; they were simply provided with a statement that their use of the site constituted “express written consent for [site] and our Marketing Partners to contact” the consumer.

As a result of these practices, hundreds of consumers submitted complaints to the FTC, other law-enforcement organizations, and the Better Business Bureau, claiming that On Point had misrepresented their services as providing actual government benefits, not just guides. Furthermore, a consumer survey⁵ commissioned by the FTC found that most visitors to an On Point websites believed On Point could actually provide government benefits or services, not just guides.

On Point also took steps to prevent paying customers from receiving refunds and to hide the number of credit-card chargebacks On Point was receiving from credit-card processors. Despite having a money-back guarantee, customers who requested a refund directly from On Point rarely received one. For example, when an undercover FTC agent purchased an On Point guide and then requested a refund, On Point offered only to refund the later $19.99 charge, not the initial $4.99 charge (characterized as a “processing fee”); On Point never actually refunded either.

In contrast, customers who instead chose to dispute their purchase directly with credit-card processors such as Visa often succeeded. For On Point, this was a serious problem; businesses that exceeded set limits for chargeback rates were subject to account monitoring, suspension, and termination, and On Point consistently exceeded these limits – over the course of three years, On Point triggered Visa’s threshold sixty-four times. Indeed, several credit-card processors did terminate On Point accounts. To limit these consequences, On Point created various companies selling identical products on similar websites to reduce the number of credit-card chargebacks originating from any particular site, a practice known as “load balancing.” On Point’s practice of dividing charges into two installments, an initial “processing fee” and a larger, substantial fee later, also served to disguise the number of chargebacks; when customers disputed one of the charges, On Point would have a fifty percent chargeback-to-successful sales ratio, not a hundred percent ratio.

B.

Robert Zangrillo, the last remaining individual appellant, is a private equity, venture capital, and real estate investor who conducts business under the Dragon Global name through the four remaining corporate appellants. Of these, DGM is Zangrillo's management entity with four full-time employees that handles the day-to-day operations of Dragon Global's investments, DGH is the primary investment vehicle for the Zangrillo family,⁶ OPCP is the special-purpose vehicle used by DGH to invest in the On Point enterprise, and DG is a largely defunct entity with no assets. OPCP owned an approximately twenty-eight percent interest in On Point Global, LLC, a holding company. OPCP was one of the two members with the largest ownership interests in the holding company, the other member being controlled by Katz.

Dragon Global's leadership, known collectively as the "Venture Team," consisted of Zangrillo, Katz, and another investor named Bob Bellack. The Venture Team also formed the core leadership of On Point: Zangrillo served as a consultant and the Chairman of On Point's Board of Managers ("the Board") until March

2019, when he was indicted in an unrelated college-entrance bribery scheme,⁷ Katz served as On Point’s CEO and as a board member, and Bellack served as On Point’s CFO. While Dragon Global had investments in both major companies such as Facebook, Twitter, and Uber, and minority “seed” investments in newly formed companies, at the time On Point was Dragon Global’s only “early-stage control” investment. Dragon Global’s website described early-stage control investments as “seek[ing] to take controlling, majority ownership stakes” in the company in order to “fully leverage the broad experience of [Dragon Global’s] Operating Partners,” the Venture Team.

Zangrillo and Katz also had “Special Approval Rights” over On Point. These rights provided that On Point and its subsidiaries could not perform a variety of actions, including, but not limited to, dispersing company assets outside the normal course of business; approving a budget; engaging bankers; or hiring or terminating On Point’s President, CEO, or CFO without prior written approval from both Zangrillo and Katz. The Special Approval Rights essentially gave both Zangrillo and Katz a veto over major company decisions, above and beyond the control they already exercised by sitting on the Board.

Zangrillo and one of Dragon Global’s four full-time employees, Megan Black, also performed extensive services for On Point.

⁷ See United States v. Sidoo, 471 F. Supp. 3d 369 (D. Mass. 2020) (summarizing the indictment).

Zangrillo entered into a consulting agreement with On Point to last from January 1, 2018, until December 31, 2019. Pursuant to this agreement, Zangrillo assisted On Point with raising capital, collecting fees, coordinating and attending investor meetings, reviewing slides about On Point for investor meetings, and updating investors as to the status of their investments. Black assisted Zangrillo in these endeavors and was put on On Point's payroll from February 2018 to July 2018. Additionally, both Zangrillo and Black were put on On Point's payroll and company health insurance during the month of January 2019. However, Black claims she was never an employee of On Point.

The FTC contends that Dragon Global and On Point shared office space in Miami and Los Angeles; Dragon Global disputes both claims. For the Miami address, the FTC claims Zangrillo shared a corner office with Katz and Bellack, which Zangrillo and Dragon Global deny. In support, the FTC notes that Zangrillo owns the building through one of his real estate companies, has the building listed as Dragon Global's address on LinkedIn, and that the only other addresses Dragon Global ever listed are a UPS store and a Dragon Global employee's house. In contrast, Dragon Global points to a declaration by Black where she states that "to [her] knowledge, Dragon Global has never ran [sic] business at that address, and has never received mail at that address." Most significantly, both the FTC and Zangrillo point to two separate sets of seating charts admitted as evidence at the preliminary injunction hearing: one, prepared by an FTC investigator when the FTC searched the Miami office in December 2019, lists only Katz and Bellack as sharing the corner office, while the other, taken during the December search from an employee's desk, lists Katz, Bellack, and Zangrillo as occupying the corner office.

Opinion of the Court

In Los Angeles, Dragon Global subleased part of its office to On Point, storing On Point records and giving On Point employees access to the office. However, Zangrillo still used the office and continued to have Dragon Global's name on the door, although On Point requested that its name be added. Additionally, On Point often paid rent to the building owner on behalf of Dragon Global, and other companies also subleasing parts of the Los Angeles office from Dragon Global sometimes paid their rent to On Point, noting the rent was for Dragon Global.

C.

This case began with the FTC filing a complaint under 15 U.S.C. § 53(b) on December 9, 2019, against the individuals and entities involved in the On Point enterprise. On December 13, the District Court granted a temporary restraining order against the On Point parties, freezing their assets, placing the corporate defendants into a receivership, and enjoining all defendants from misrepresenting their services or releasing consumer information obtained from On Point's activities. A month later, the Court held a two-day evidentiary hearing on January 10 and 13, 2020; in total, the Court spent over fifteen hours examining the evidence. At the close of the January 13 hearing, the Court made an oral finding that the corporate entities were in a common enterprise and that the individual defendants had “sufficient control and knowledge to make them responsible.” On January 14, the Court granted a preliminary injunction with substantially the same terms as the temporary restraining order against On Point and Dragon Global, from which On Point and Dragon Global filed separate appeals.

Concurrently with its actions in this case, the FTC also reopened proceedings against Katz in a 2014 case, FTC v. Acquinity Interactive (“Acquinity”). In Acquinity, the FTC alleged that Katz used spam text messages to lure consumers into disclosing personal information and making purchases with offers of free merchandise such as $1000 gift cards or Apple iPads. The FTC and Katz agreed to the issuance of a consent decree in Acquinity whereby Katz was permanently enjoined from making materially misleading representations about the “cost, performance, efficacy, nature, characteristics, benefits, or safety of any product or service.” Additionally, the consent decree specified that the permanent injunction applied to any person “in active concert or participation” with Katz who received “actual notice” of the injunction.

On February 12, 2020, the FTC moved the District Court in Acquinity for an order to show cause why Katz should not be held in contempt for violating the Acquinity permanent injunction through his activities with On Point. The FTC also alleged that various corporate entities in this case, including DG, DGM, and DGH, had actual notice of the Acquinity permanent injunction and had acted in concert with Katz to violate the injunction. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(d)(2). Therefore, the FTC asked the Court to require those entities to show cause for why they should not be held in contempt as well. On February 14, the Court ordered both Katz and the named entities to show cause for why they should not be held in contempt.

On September 18, 2020, the District Court released DGM from the receivership in this case based on the recommendation of the receiver. On October 15, the Court also released DG from the receivership in this case based on the recommendation of the receiver. This left only two Dragon Global entities, DGH and OPCP, in the On Point receivership.

On April 22, 2021, the Supreme Court held in AMG Capital Management that 15 U.S.C. § 53(b) does not permit an award of equitable monetary relief such as restitution or disgorgement, setting off a chain reaction of motions in both the On Point and Acquinity cases. See AMG Cap. Mgmt., 141 S. Ct. at 1347–48. On April 23, the individual On Point defendants, Katz, Zangrillo, Brent Levison, Arlene Mahon, Elisha Rothman, and Christopher Sherman, moved to lift the asset freeze as to themselves. In response, on April 30 the FTC moved in Acquinity for an order to show cause why Zangrillo, Levison, and Rothman should not be held in contempt for violating the Acquinity injunction against Katz. The FTC also sought in Acquinity a preliminary injunction to impose an asset freeze against Zangrillo, Katz, Levison, Rothman, and the various named corporate entities to preserve funds for money damages in a future contempt hearing.⁸

On July 19, 2021, we granted Katz, Sherman, and the On Point corporate entities' voluntary motion to terminate their appeal of the District Court's January 14, 2020, preliminary injunction in On Point. This left only Zangrillo, DG, DGM, DGH, and OPCP as parties to this appeal.

On August 13, 2021, the District Court ruled on both the Acquinity and On Point motions. In Acquinity, the Court granted the requested preliminary injunction and imposed an asset freeze on Katz, Levison, Rothman, and the named corporate entities, including DG, DGM, and DGH. The Acquinity asset freeze contains the same terms and covers the same property as the On Point asset freeze; indeed, the Court amended the Acquinity asset freeze on August 18 to ensure the two asset freezes were identical. However, the Court found that Zangrillo lacked actual notice of the Acquinity injunction and so excluded him from the Acquinity asset freeze. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 65(d)(2). In On Point, the Court released all defendants from the asset freeze except those whom the Court listed as subject to the asset freeze in Acquinity, holding that the Acquinity asset freeze made the issue moot as to them. Notably, the Court

⁸ Essentially, the FTC used its show cause motion under the 2014 Acquinity permanent injunction as the platform for moving the District Court to issue a new preliminary injunction in Acquinity against parties who were never defendants in the original Acquinity case.

lists DG, DGM, and DGH as subject to the Acquinity asset freeze in the Acquinity preliminary injunction, but only lists DGH as subject to the Acquinity asset freeze in the On Point order. This leaves some doubt as to whether DG and DGM are still subject to the On Point asset freeze, although they are clearly subject to the Acquinity asset freeze. The Court did not create a receivership in Acquinity nor affect the receivership in On Point with these orders.

On September 29, 2021, the District Court acted again in both Acquinity and On Point. In Acquinity, the Court granted summary judgment in favor of Dragon Global on the show cause for contempt motion, finding that Dragon Global both lacked actual notice of the 2014 Acquinity permanent injunction against Katz and that Dragon Global did not act in “active concert or participation” with Katz. In On Point, the Court also granted summary judgment in favor of Dragon Global, finding that Dragon Global was not in a common enterprise with On Point and thus not responsible for On Point’s activities. However, the Court found that there were “genuine disputes of material facts” regarding whether Zangrillo could be held responsible for On Point’s activities and so denied his motion for summary judgment. Yet despite these orders and to the best of this Court’s knowledge based on our review of the Acquinity and On Point dockets, the District Court has not yet entered an order vacating or amending the preliminary injunctions in either Acquinity or On Point as a result of its September 29 orders. Therefore, the preliminary injunctions in both cases appear to remain as they were following the August 13 orders.

To summarize, this leaves DGH subject to the asset freezes in Acquinity and On Point and to the On Point receivership, DG and DGM subject to the asset freeze in Acquinity and possibly also in On Point but not to the On Point receivership, OPCP subject to the On Point receivership but neither of the asset freezes, and Zangrillo subject to neither asset freeze. Furthermore, all five remaining appellants are still enjoined by the On Point preliminary injunction from materially misrepresenting On Point's services or releasing customer information obtained from the On Point enterprise to third parties.

II.

A preliminary injunction is an “extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right.” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, 129 S. Ct. 365, 376 (2008). We review a district court's grant of a preliminary injunction for abuse of discretion. Democratic Exec. Comm. of Fla. v. Lee, 915 F.3d 1312, 1317 (11th Cir. 2019); see also Carillon Imps., Ltd. v. Frank Pesce Int'l Grp., Ltd., 112 F.3d 1125, 1126 (11th Cir. 1997) (“The review of a district court's decision to grant or deny a preliminary injunction is extremely narrow in scope”). We review the preliminary injunction's underlying legal conclusions de novo and its findings of fact for clear error. Democratic Exec. Comm., 915 F.3d at 1317.

As mootness is a jurisdictional issue, we may review questions of mootness sua sponte. Nat'l Advert. Co. v. City of Miami, 402 F.3d 1329, 1331–32 (11th Cir. 2005). “We review the question of mootness de novo.” Id. at 1331 (quoting Coral Springs St. Sys., Inc. v. City of Sunrise, 371 F.3d 1320, 1328 (11th Cir. 2004)).

III.

Prior to AMG Capital Management, Eleventh Circuit precedent interpreted 15 U.S.C. § 53(b) as not limiting the traditional equitable powers of the district courts, including the power to grant monetary relief. See FTC v. U.S. Oil & Gas Corp., 748 F.2d 1431, 1434 (11th Cir. 1984). Therefore, district courts could implement preventative measures, such as asset freezes, in preliminary injunctions to preserve resources “needed to make permanent relief possible,” i.e., to satisfy a future monetary judgment. Id. However, in AMG Capital Management the Supreme Court held that § 53(b) does not allow district courts to grant “equitable monetary relief such as restitution or disgorgement,” thereby abrogating U.S. Oil & Gas. See AMG Cap. Mgmt., 141 S. Ct. at 1344. As monetary relief is no longer available under § 53(b), there is no need to preserve resources for a future judgment. Consequently, the imposition of an asset freeze or receivership premised solely on § 53(b) is inappropriate and we vacate the portions of the District Court’s preliminary injunction imposing these restrictions on Dragon Global to the extent the Court has not already provided relief.

We note that this decision directly applies only to Zangrillo and Dragon Global, as all other appellants have chosen to voluntarily dismiss their appeal. Furthermore, nothing in this opinion should be construed as commenting on or having a legal effect on the separate asset freeze in Acquinity, as that case is not properly before us on appeal. Since we reach this result based on the holding in AMG Capital Management, we need not address any of Dragon Global's other arguments for relief from the asset freeze and receivership.

We recognize that the separate asset freeze imposed on DG, DGM, and DGH in the related Acquinity matter may limit the short-term practical effect of this decision. However, despite the District Court and FTC's assertions to the contrary, the imposition of a separate asset freeze on the same parties in a related case, even an asset freeze with identical terms covering the same property, does not moot the question of whether the asset freeze and receivership is lawful in this case. An issue only becomes moot when "the parties lack a legally cognizable interest in the outcome." Chafin v. Chafin, 568 U.S. 165, 172, 133 S. Ct. 1017, 1023 (2013) (quoting Already, LLC v. Nike, Inc., 568 U.S. 85, 91, 133 S. Ct. 721, 726 (2013)). Any "concrete interest, however small, in the outcome of the litigation" is sufficient to prevent a case from becoming moot. Id. (quoting Knox v. Serv. Emps. Int'l Union, Loc. 1000, 567 U.S. 298, 307–08, 132 S. Ct. 2277, 2287 (2012)). Lifting the unlawful asset freeze and receivership in this case is a necessary condition for Dragon Global to regain the use and control of its property, even if it is not sufficient in and of itself. Furthermore, until the asset freeze and receiverships are terminated by court order, they continue to remain in force. Therefore, Dragon Global continues to have a legally cognizable interest in lifting the On Point asset freeze and receivership and this aspect of the appeal is not moot.

With the asset freeze and receivership dealt with by AMG Capital Management, the only remaining question is whether the District Court abused its discretion by enjoining Zangrillo and Dragon Global from misrepresenting their services or releasing customer information. Prospective injunctive relief is still allowed under § 53(b). See AMG Cap. Mgmt., 141 S. Ct. at 1347–48. Zangrillo and Dragon Global challenge (1) the Court’s finding that the FTC will likely succeed on the merits and that the balance of equities favors a preliminary injunction, (2) the sufficiency of the findings of fact issued by the Court, (3) the Court’s finding that Dragon Global participated in a common enterprise with On Point,⁹ and (4) the Court’s finding that Zangrillo was individually responsible for the actions taken by On Point. We address each argument in turn.

A.

Under the FTCA, a district court may grant a preliminary injunction in an enforcement action by the FTC “[u]pon a proper showing that, weighing the equities and considering the Commission’s likelihood of ultimate success, such action would be in the public interest.” 15 U.S.C. § 53(b). To succeed on the merits under 15 U.S.C. § 45(a), the FTC must show that “(1) there was a representation; (2) the representation was likely to mislead customers acting reasonably under the circumstances, and (3) the representation was material.” FTC v. Tashman, 318 F.3d 1273, 1277 (11th Cir. 2003).

The District Court had ample evidence to conclude that the FTC has shown all three elements. The Court found that On Point had “misrepresented on [its] websites that [it] would provide government services (e.g., a driver’s license, car registration, or eligibility determination for public benefits) to consumers who paid money and/or provided personal information.” This finding was based on the Court’s determination that:

The websites were cleverly designed so that even though disclosures appeared on many or most of the pages, consumer attention would be drawn to links and language in larger, more colorful font that directed them to the service they were seeking (such as renewing a driver’s license) and most consumers would likely ignore the disclosures written in relatively smaller and pale-colored font. And, if a consumer did read the disclosures, they would learn they could purchase a guide and would also learn that the site is a privately-owned company selling guides that can be obtained for free elsewhere on governmental sites. But, most importantly, they were not clearly informed that they could not obtain the government service they were misled to believe was available to them.

Having reviewed the record, we cannot say that this determination is clear error. On Point's websites could easily be perceived by unwary visitors as promising government services or benefits, with options such as "Renew Driver's License," "Replace Driver's License," and "Reinstate Suspended License" on an official-sounding website like "DMV.com" lending itself to that impression. Indeed, On Point's advertisements occasionally outright promised consumers they could obtain services at home, telling consumers to "skip the lines doing it from you [sic] home." The eligibility websites face similar problems, telling consumers to "find out" if they're eligible for government benefits and then soliciting a great deal of personal information necessary for determining eligibility, only to offer generic advice once the information is provided. Nor were the disclosures sufficient to disabuse consumers of this impression, being either too small or too vague to dispel the misrepresentations otherwise created by the websites.

The District Court also had sufficient evidence to find that the websites were not just likely to mislead consumers, but actively doing so, with hundreds of consumer complaints, a history of regular chargebacks, and a consumer survey to rely on. Furthermore, On Point's misrepresentations were clearly material, either inducing consumers to purchase guides in the belief they were obtaining benefits or to surrender sensitive personal information to obtain an eligibility determination. As such, the Court could properly find that the FTC was likely to ultimately succeed on the merits.

Having determined that On Point's activities were materially misleading the public, the District Court was within its discretion to conclude that a preliminary injunction was necessary. To begin with, "judgments . . . about the viability of a plaintiff's claims and the balancing of equities and the public interest . . . are the district court's to make." BellSouth Telecomms., Inc. v. MCIMetro Access Transmission Servs., LLC, 425 F.3d 964, 968 (11th Cir. 2005) (quoting Cumulus Media v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, Inc., 304 F.3d 1167, 1171 (11th Cir. 2002)). We will not lightly disturb this balancing of the equities, particularly when supported by factual findings drawn from two full days of evidentiary hearings. Zangrillo and Dragon Global's main objection, that the hardships imposed by the asset freeze and receivership outweighed the potential public benefit of a preliminary injunction, is moot now that we have lifted the asset freeze and receivership. Therefore, the Court did not abuse its discretion by imposing a preliminary injunction as the FTC will likely succeed on the merits and the public interest weighs in favor of halting the materially misleading practices.

B.

Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires that district courts make “findings of fact and conclusions of law” when issuing an injunction. Snook v. Tr. Co. of Ga. Bank of Savannah, 859 F.2d 865, 872 (11th Cir. 1988). Findings of fact must be sufficient to allow the reviewing court “an opportunity to engage in meaningful appellate review.” Danley v. Allen, 480 F.3d 1090, 1091 (11th Cir. 2007). Oral findings are allowed so long as they are made “on the record after the close of evidence.” See Fed. R. Civ. P. 52(a).

The District Court did not include its findings on common enterprise and individual responsibility in its written order. Instead, the Court issued oral findings at the close of the evidentiary hearing, stating:

After considering the written submissions of the parties, the testimony, and all the evidence that was presented, I find that the FTC has met its burden as to both the entities and the individual defendants. I find that there has been a showing that there was a common enterprise based upon shared control[], shared offices, shared payroll, commingled funds, [and] that the individuals, the government has shown that each of them had sufficient control and knowledge to make them responsible.

Zangrillo and Dragon Global contend that this statement was not a sufficiently detailed factual finding under Rule 52(a) and that therefore the Court abused its discretion by including Zangrillo and Dragon Global in the preliminary injunction.

We disagree. District court findings need not be extensive. A “judge need only make brief, definite, pertinent findings and conclusions upon the contested matters; there is no necessity for over-elaboration of detail or particularization of facts.” Stock Equip. Co. v. Tenn. Valley Auth., 906 F.2d 583, 592 (11th Cir. 1990) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 52, Advisory Committee Note (1946)). So long as there is “sufficient record evidence to support the findings, [district courts] need not ‘state the evidence or any of the reasoning upon the evidence.’” Id. (quoting Petterson Lighterage & Towing Corp. v. N.Y. Cent. R.R., 126 F.2d 992, 996 (2d Cir. 1942)). The District Court identified the precise factors which led to its determination that the corporate defendants were in a common enterprise with each other and that the individual defendants were individually responsible under the FTCA. Furthermore, the Court did not merely list all the potential factors, but excluded those for which it found insufficient evidence, such as coordinating advertising or direct participation. See infra Parts III.C and III.D. The Court also based its findings upon “the written submissions of the parties, the testimony, and all the evidence that was presented,” which, in the context of the statement, refers to the evidence presented during the two days of evidentiary hearings. Together, these statements enable meaningful appellate review under Rule 52(a); we know what factors led the Court to making its determination and what evidence it considered when doing so. Accordingly, we proceed with our review of the Court's findings.

C.

We have previously recognized that corporate entities can be responsible under the FTCA for each other's actions through the common enterprise doctrine. FTC v. WV Universal Mgmt., LLC, 877 F.3d 1234, 1240 (11th Cir. 2017). However, we have never officially endorsed a test for determining whether a common enterprise exists under the FTCA. Both the FTC and Dragon Global rely on the test we used in an unpublished case, FTC v. Lanier Law, LLC, 715 F. App'x 970, 979–80 (11th Cir. 2017). Lanier Law found that a corporate entity can be responsible for the actions of other corporations in a business venture when “the structure, organization, and pattern of a business venture reveal a common enterprise or a maze of integrated business entities.” Id. (quoting FTC v. Wash. Data Res., 856 F. Supp. 2d 1247, 1271 (M.D. Fla. 2012)). Lanier Law then lists several factors for determining whether a common enterprise exists, such as whether the businesses operated under common control, shared office space and employees, commingled funds, and coordinated advertising. Lanier Law, 715 F. App'x at 980. This test has been officially adopted by the Sixth Circuit and is already employed by district courts within our circuit. See FTC v. E.M.A. Nationwide, Inc., 767 F.3d 611, 636–37 (6th Cir. 2014); see e.g., FTC v. Simple Health Plans LLC, 379 F. Supp. 3d 1346, 1363 (S.D. Fla. 2019), aff'd 801 F. App'x. 685 (11th Cir. 2020); FTC

v. Roca Labs, Inc., 345 F. Supp. 3d 1375, 1399 (M.D. Fla. 2018); FTC v. NPB Advert., Inc., 218 F. Supp. 3d 1352, 1362 (M.D. Fla. 2016); FTC v. Nat'l Urological Grp., Inc., 645 F. Supp. 2d 1167, 1182 (N.D. Ga. 2008), aff'd 356 F. App'x 358 (11th Cir. 2009). We now adopt this test as well.

Of course, when the FTC brings an enforcement action under § 53(b), it is not authorized to recover equitable monetary relief. AMG Cap. Mgmt., 141 S. Ct. at 1344. The FTC may recover civil monetary relief under a common enterprise theory only if the FTC first pursues administrative proceedings, obtains a cease-and-desist order, and then brings the civil action. See id. at 1346 (citing 15 U.S.C. §§ 45(l), 57(b)). However, a common enterprise theory may still be used to disregard corporateness when granting injunctive relief. See E.M.A. Nationwide Inc., 767 F.3d at 619, 636–37 (affirming both restitution and a permanent injunction against multiple corporate defendants based on a common enterprise theory). Therefore, we will continue with our analysis about whether Dragon Global was in a common enterprise with On Point for the purpose of injunctive relief under § 53(b).

The District Court did not commit clear error by finding that Dragon Global was part of a common enterprise with On Point based on common control, shared office space and employees, and commingled funds. Under common control, Dragon Global and On Point's leadership heavily overlapped. Dragon Global's three "Venture Team" partners, Katz, Zangrillo, and Belack, each occupied important positions within On Point, respectively CEO, Chairman of the Board, and CFO. Additionally, Katz and Zangrillo together controlled a majority stake in On Point, sat on the Board, and exercised “Special Approval Rights” over On Point. While other investors certainly participated in On Point, Dragon Global’s Venture Team was clearly in control. Indeed, this behavior aligns with Dragon Global’s “early-stage control” investment model, whereby Dragon Global would take “controlling, majority ownership stakes” to “fully leverage the broad experience” of the Venture Team. Dragon Global claims that this behavior is simply common practice for investors. Perhaps this is true – but it does not make Dragon Global’s control over On Point any less real.

20-10790

Opinion of the Court

Dragon Global contends that it did not share office space with On Point in either Miami or Los Angeles, and there is certainly a factual dispute on the matter. In Miami, the FTC points towards the office being listed as both On Point’s and Dragon Global’s address on LinkedIn and a seating chart showing that Zangrillo, Katz, and Bellack shared a corner office, while Dragon Global responds with an affidavit from a Dragon Global employee stating the company never operated out of Miami and its own seating chart showing only Katz and Bellack shared the corner office. Likewise, in Los Angeles, On Point and Dragon Global did share an office and paid and accepted rent interchangeably, but Dragon Global emphasizes that this was all pursuant to an “arms-length” sublease agreement. Luckily, we do not need to decide whether On Point and Dragon Global actually shared office space. That is the job of the finder of fact. We need only decide whether there was sufficient evidence in the record to support the District Court's finding that On Point and Dragon Global did share office space. Determining which seating chart to believe, assessing the credibility of an affidavit by a Dragon Global employee, and exploring the precise relationship between On Point and Dragon Global in the Los Angeles office is the province of the trial court, and we find that there is sufficient evidence to support the Court's determination that On Point and Dragon Global did share office space.

Dragon Global claims that it did not share employees with On Point because Black and Zangrillo were not "official" employees of On Point, despite working with On Point for several months and being placed on On Point's payroll and health insurance. If this was the test for shared employees in the common enterprise context, companies could avoid this factor merely through labeling. Furthermore, if Black and Zangrillo were not employees, then that is simply evidence of commingling funds instead. In either case, the two other Venture Team members, Katz and Bellack, were certainly employees of On Point as the CEO and CFO respectively. Likewise, On Point and Dragon Global did commingle funds by interchangeably paying and accepting rent for the Los Angeles office. Therefore, we affirm the District Court's determination that On Point and Dragon Global were in a common enterprise based on common control, shared office space and employees, and commingled funds.

For an individual to be responsible under the FTCA for the wrongdoings of a corporation, the FTC must show that the individual had “some knowledge of the practices” and that the individual either “participated directly in the practice or acts or had the authority to control them.” FTC v. Gem Merch. Corp., 87 F.3d 466, 470 (11th Cir. 1996) (internal quotation marks omitted). As with corporate responsibility under a common enterprise theory, individual responsibility under 15 U.S.C. § 53(b) no longer includes equitable monetary relief; however, individuals may still be enjoined under § 53(b) for the actions of corporations should the FTC establish knowledge and either participation or the authority to control. See FTC v. IAB Mktg. Assocs., LP, 746 F.3d 1228, 1233 (11th Cir. 2014) (affirming the application of a preliminary injunction including both injunctive and monetary relief to individual defendants).

The District Court found that Zangrillo had “sufficient control and knowledge to make [Zangrillo] responsible” for the actions of On Point. As Chairman of the Board and a “consultant” who regularly gave presentations to potential investors, Zangrillo was certainly aware of On Point’s lines of business and the revenue each line generated. Zangrillo claims that he was only involved in high-level decision making and had no knowledge of or control over the contents of On Point’s websites. In fact, the slides Zangrillo prepared for his presentations listed each of On Point’s services and how they fit into On Point’s business model. These slides described DMV.com as On Point’s “FLAGSHIP” website and named various state drivers' licenses websites that On Point operated. The slides also included screenshots from some of On Point's websites.

Zangrillo also likely knew that On Point made over eighty million dollars in two years selling "guides" on government services, and it almost beggars belief that he would be completely unaware of how On Point's websites were raising that quantity of money. Even assuming Zangrillo never once visited an On Point website, his presentation slides show that Zangrillo knew On Point was capturing a great deal of personal information (which On Point sold for over seventeen million dollars) despite supposedly offering only guides drawn from publicly available information. Zangrillo would also need to have been completely unaware of the persistent problems On Point faced with credit-card processors and charge-backs, problems which resulted in the termination of several On Point accounts and the creation of various On Point companies to minimize the problem through load-balancing. Taken together, this information is sufficient for the District Court to find that Zangrillo likely had "some knowledge" of On Point's deceptive activities.

Zangrillo also had the authority to control On Point's activities. He was the Chairman of the Board, a major investor, one of On Point's primary fundraisers, and had special approval rights over many of On Point's activities. Zangrillo's contention that he was neither an officer of the company nor managed its day-to-day affairs is irrelevant; the true question is whether he had the "authority to control" On Point's activities or, in other words, whether

Opinion of the Court

Zangrillo could have ended the deceptive practices. Gem Merch. Corp., 87 F.3d at 470. Besides only Katz, Zangrillo had the most authority of anyone in On Point, and should he have chosen to exercise that authority, he likely “could have nipped the offending [activities] in the bud.” FTC v. Direct Mktg. Concepts, Inc., 624 F.3d 1, 13 (1st Cir. 2010). Therefore, we affirm the District Court’s finding that Zangrillo was individually responsible for the actions of On Point.

IV.

For the reasons set forth above, we AFFIRM the parts of the preliminary injunction enjoining Zangrillo and Dragon Global from engaging in deceptive practices or releasing consumer information, VACATE the asset freeze and receivership as to Dragon Global to the extent the District Court has not already provided relief, and REMAND this case for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.¹⁰
